

Self-interests keep Klinge for recreation

I'm writing in response to The Current's Jan. 19 article "City agency finishes study of Klinge trail." This all began when there was no money to fix the road. Now we're looking at more than $6 million for a hike/bike trail and a legal sleight of hand to let it remain a road on the books, though not what you and I would call a public street.

As I spent eight minutes getting across Connecticut Avenue on Porter Street this morning, I used the time to reflect on this special interest triumph.
